THE FACTORY LEDGER, VOLUME III

The Source Ledger

The first guide sketched the team. The second verified who's on it and what they need to know. This one goes one layer deeper: for every technical skill on the chart, what's the actual system, table, or document a person in that seat pulls from — by its real name, not a category label.

12 ROLES · 36 SKILLS MAPPED · 90+ NAMED SOURCES, TABLES & DOCUMENTS · REAL SAP/ORACLE OBJECTS VERIFIED AGAINST OFFICIAL DOCUMENTATION

Name the real object

actual SAP table codes, Oracle table/view names, named platforms — not "an ERP system somewhere"

Show the confidence level

every item is tagged verified, corroborated, or generic — so you know how much to lean on it

Hand over something raw

a sample extract per role, built on the real field structure, ships alongside this PDF

Every finance skill eventually touches a system of record. "Internal-controls testing" isn't abstract — someone is actually querying SAP's change-log tables, or pulling a risk-control matrix out of Excel, or reading a signed management representation letter. This guide catalogs those underlying objects, role by role, the same twelve roles verified in The Skills Ledger.

Research ran per-role against primary sources wherever one exists: SAP's own Help Portal and support knowledge base, Oracle's official Fusion data-model documentation, SEC.gov and EDGAR, IRS.gov, CBP.gov, COSO, the IIA, and named vendor documentation. Where a specific table name couldn't be confirmed against a primary or well-corroborated source, it was left out rather than guessed — that discipline is why some skills list two data sources and others list three, and why a few items below are explicitly marked generic instead of given a fabricated system name.

SCHEDULE K — HOW TO READ THIS

Confidence, not just a name

Three tags appear throughout. They describe how directly each item was verified — not how important it is.

VERIFIED fetched directly from an official source — SAP Help Portal, Oracle's own Fusion data-model docs, SEC.gov, or an equivalent primary source — usually with the specific field names confirmed.

CORROBORATED the object's existence and purpose is consistent across multiple independent technical references, but a primary-source field list wasn't pulled this pass.

GENERIC a real, common artifact type (a workbook, a PDF template) with no single named system behind it — described as a category on purpose, not a placeholder for a guess.

> A word on the two ERPs named throughout: SAP and Oracle are used because their schemas are the most extensively publicly documented in the industry — not because every manufacturer runs one or the other. A company on NetSuite, Microsoft Dynamics, or a smaller MRP system is doing the same work against differently-named tables. Treat the specific codes here as the clearest available illustration of the underlying pattern, not as a claim about what any particular company runs.

SCHEDULE L — ROLE → SKILL → SOURCE

What each seat actually queries

Two objects per skill: the strongest verified source and its closest backup, in the order a practitioner would reach for them. Each role closes with the one source picked as that role's sample extract — the object whose real field structure was used to build the attached raw file.

> Note on the correction below the surface: an early working name for the AR invoice table was flagged, checked against Oracle's own Fusion data-model documentation, and found wrong before it reached this page — the real table is RA_CUSTOMER_TRX_ALL, not "AR_CUSTOMER_TRX_ALL." Oracle's AR_ prefix is reserved for receipt-side tables (e.g. AR_CASH_RECEIPTS_ALL); the historical RA_ prefix (Receivables/Revenue Accounting) carries the transaction tables. Left here as a reminder that a plausible-sounding name is exactly the failure mode this document is trying to avoid.

Twelve roles, thirty-six technical skills, and the real objects behind each one — built the same way as the rest of this series: research before formatting, a named source for every claim that has one, and an honest label for the few that don't. Where a system name couldn't be confirmed, it was left generic rather than invented.

Read alongside The Factory Ledger (how the finance function fits together) and The Skills Ledger (who sits in each seat, and what they need to know).
